

MONEY MATTERS (EDITOR)

Money matters is an economics centered magazine that aims to educate the student body around economic events and theory. Being the co-editor of Money Matters with my friend Anavi has been a great experience. Money matters has allowed me to further exacerbate my qualities of leadership, teamwork and organization. Firstly for the first time in the history of Money matters, Anavi and I decided to do a digital issue of the magazine instead of one in print, in keeping with being more sustainable. As an editor, along with writing and reading all articles, I also run sessions every Monday. Our sessions run around 30 mins during lunch time. I feel the skills of using real world application with theory I have learnt from debate has been very useful in this regard and it is a skill I wanted to imbibe within all members. Hence, we would begin every session with each member talking about a relevant economic event they had read about during the week and we would discuss it in an attempt to come up with new article topics. I would come up with an agenda that would be emailed to all members after the meeting suggesting their actions and work for the week. I think providing an opportunity for students from grade 9 to 12 to join together and share their thoughts on economic events and engage in discourse around policy and theory has been absolutely amazing. I am very lucky to have had the opportunity to lead this magazine. Due to Covid-19, we are unable to conduct meetings, but we continue to regularly update our websites and have discussions remotely.
